Presented by: Annmarie Giblin

Date of Live Stream: 07/08/21, Available on demand thereafter

Time of CLE Presentation: 60 minutes, 1:00-2:00 pm

Course Specialization: General, Technology

Course Description:

This presentation is a more legally detailed follow-up to the popular presentation E-Contracts: How Artificial Intelligence will change it all. Contract formation is evolving, and not just the way we negotiate and draft contracts, but also the technology we use to streamline the process. As contract negotiation and formation becomes an automated process, who is held liable and what happens if there is a mistake? Please join us for a discussion with Annmarie Giblin, cyber law attorney and thought leader, to discuss the legal issues that may arise when AI plays a bigger role in the formation of contracts and how these legal issues may shape future contract disputes.

You will learn:

- How technology is already changing contract drafting and negotiation, and how U.S. case law is already responding
- What regulations are relevant to this issue and how they may evolve in response
- How the fundamental legal concepts supporting contract formation and enforcement may apply to a contract created and negotiated by AI, the potential legal gaps and pitfalls that may emerge in response, and how to be legally prepared for it all.
